Finally, Magewell even has small boxes that can connect to TVs to convert NDI received over the network back to HDMI for display. NDI is not designed for live streaming directly to an online audience. It's really meant to be a way to send video between computers or from one video source to a switcher. It's truly amazing all that NDI can do.

Hey folks, I'm doing some research on setting up a small control room at our offices for live production. I work at a digital publishing company with something like 400 employees in NYC, so we currently have a pretty robust corporate network. Problem is, lots of people are on it at all times running the website and social pages, uploading videos, articles, connecting to the NAS and editing ...
