AHP is a method for decision making in situations where multiple objectives are present. This method uses a pair-wise comparison matrix to calculate the relative value and costs of security requirements. By using AHP, the requirements engineer can also confirm the consistency of the result.

Abstract In this paper, a new approach for handling fuzzy AHP is introduced, with the use of triangular fuzzy numbers for pairwise comparison scale of fuzzy AHP, and the use of the extent analysis method for the synthetic extent value S_i of the pairwise comparison. By applying the principle of the comparison of fuzzy numbers, that is, $V (M_1 \geq M_2) = 1$ iff
